WHILE considering it our duty to note with out delay the removal of the small-pox patients to the Civil Hospital, we deemed it right, as the matter was of so much import ance, to refrain from commenting upon it and Foong-a-yun, with stealing her box of which must have been an obstruction when until we were in possession not only of the facts, but, if possible, of some kind of explanation of them.

We now understand that the exact state of the matter is as follows. With a view to saving the fees, which amount in the course of a year to some $200, usually paid to the health officer for visiting the patients at Stone-cutters' Island, it appears that Dr. sed the two defendants and her things; she struction, the present case would be met by McCoy, the new Colonial-Surgeon, determined on reverting to the old system of placing the patients in a matshed near the Civil Hospital. They were, it appears, as noticed by our evening contemporary, in a convalescent state, and we believe this fact is pleaded in extenuation of what might otherwise be not unjustly regarded as an act little short of inhumanity. Of this, at least in any severesense, the Colonial-Surgeon cannot be accused, though it may be held to be at least not very kindly and considerate to remove men weakened by severe illness her house was the third house from Queen's from a quiet and healthy place to marsheds creeted in a populous part of the town, and which can hardly be deemed to form a suitable domicile for patients suffering from so serious a malady. The Civil Hospital is avowedly different localities of the city, so much so and instructed Sergeant Ayow, of the situated in a very unfavourable position—it is in the midst of a bad atmosphere, arising from the native town below it; is anything but quiet; and above all, is so situated that the disease may spread with the greatest rapidity. AN AMERICAN MURDERESS. A most extraordinary and terribles career of |26 boxes Rhubarb, each 1 picul; 2,358 boxes | at $18. crime has been brought to light in America, through the voluntary confession, by Lydia Sherman, of New Haven, Connecticut, that she has been guilty of an almost unprecedented series of diabolical murders. The astounding story in the New York Herald of the 13th inst, would appear to be almost incredible were it not that the facts contained therein are strongly confirmed by circumstances. The woman had been tried and convicted for causing the death of her third husband, Mr. Sherman; but. as she was only found guilty of murder in the second degree, the sentence pronounced upon her on the 12th inst. was one of imprisonment for life, Judge Sanford, who tried her, at the same time intimating his regret that he 85 cases Tobacco; 91 cases Medicines; 57 pkgs. could not send her to the sosffold instead of to Ironware; 30 bdls. To the former, and subsequently to other persons, she volunteered to give the "full story of her life." In relating the borrible narrative she evinced. forty-eight years of age, and that she was born near the town of Burlington, N.J. She was brought up to the trade of a tailoress and worked for a man named Owen in New Brunswick. While there she became acquainted with her "first victim," Mr. Edward Struck to whom she was married shortly afterwards. They then went to Yorkville, where Struck worked at his trade as a carriage blacksmith, and where she had her first child. Afterwards they lived at New York and other places together for about fourteen years, several children being born. Struck then joined the police force, and was sent to Manhattanville, where the prisoner encountered what she called her "first trouble," as Struck was discharged from the force on a charge of cowardice. The man after this declined to try and get any work and would lie in bed for weeks together, declining to see a doctor, and saying that he was not Finally he appeared to go out of his mind, and at last, acting on the advice of a pollee sergeaut with whom the woman had formed an acquaintance, she resolved upon "putting him out of the way." The culprit describes the murder of her husband, and then of her obildren, in the following terms:

"My husband at the time was getting worse and worse, and I was tempted to go and buy arsenic. I came home and made some oatmeal gruel, and put in it about half a thimbleful of arsenic, and stirred it in well. Then I gave i to my husband to drink, and he drank of several times during the afternoon. He was then taken sick, with purging. I sent for Dr Juckson, of Carmansville, and he came in th evening. He asked Mr. Struck how he felt, but he did not speak to him. The doctor stayed a short time and left with me two white powders, and told me to give them to him during the night. When the doctor went hway I went with him to the door, and asked if he thought Mr. Struck was very dangerous. He said that he was very sick, that he thought he had softening of the brain, and that he would never get well again. That night he was very bad, and I was up with him all the time. Towards morning he began to fail very fast, and about eight o'clock in the morning be died. It was in May this occurred, and I continued to keep house. I had nothing to live upon, and I be came discouraged. The children could do no. thing for me or for themselves. The lat of July I moved into another house in the wilinge." When he came he told me that they had the gastric fever, and he doctored them for a few days. Then I sent for Dr. Jackson. He told me that they were very sick, and he thought they would not live. Next morning Martha Ann died. She was taken with vomiting sconafter I gave berthe arsenic, and was afflicted in that way until she died. The doctors said nothing to indicate that they knew what was the matter. Edward was affected in the same manner. He was sick at the stomach and vomited frequently. In the evening Edward died. He was a beautiful boy, and did not complain during his illness. The doctors had no suspicion in this case either, and I did not hear of any one naming any. I continued to keep house, and had with me four children at the time. I got work by nursing. At this time my son, George Whitefield, was fourteen years old. He was employed in painting by a man, and was able to carn $2.50c a week. In the latter part of the summer. I think in August, he was taken sick, and I sent for Dr. Ovintt. "I send you a couple of cases illustrating the ways of life out here. The late Sultan. wishing to give the ladies of his barem an idea of the Crystal Palace, commissioned a firm of shipbuilders on the Thames to construct the iron framework of a huge domelike structure. It was, when completed, put up in England, and then taken to pieces for conveyance to Constantinople, where it was re-erected and covered in with glass, and formed one of the most conspicuous and ed, and the debris of a building, which from first to last must have cost more than £100,000, has been sold for old scrap iron. The other story is still more strange. The dered a new and gorgeous Imperial residence trace of this still remains in some localities, says to you on taking leave, after your first to be built for himself. Art, money, and bless you!" Such beliefs were universal. from that time you may come and go unwas told that all was prepared for his reception in his new abode. His Majesty quitted and more modern one; but alas! whether his impatience or ardour got the better of his Princess Charlotte dignity is not related, but on crossing the Rivaldo threshold he stumbled and fell. The omen Ringdove was of too serious a character to be lost on Salamie an Oriental mind. The Sultan retraced his steps, sent for the architect, and commanded that the gorgeous and magnificent edifite Zebra should be razed to the ground. The gentleman in question in despair repaired to the Grand Vizier, who failed to obtain a revocation of the order, but as a dernier ressort proceeded to the English Ambassador, who at once pointed out to his Majesty how ridiculous such an act would make him appear before the civilised world. This, with other arguments, saved the place, but the evil eye Billiqueuse is supposed still to rest on it, as it remains | Monocacy empty."-Liverpoot Albion.
